I race a lot on the east coast. Motion cars were everywhere we raced. They were bad to the bone.

I quoted this post because it's the shortest one I found and one of few that you are not bad mouthing someone. Please put it to bed now! This site is not here for folks to take shots at people, please respect that and don't bring up the other person again! This isn't a take sides thing, it's about having respect for the site allowing you the privilage of posting in it's forums.

Dennis, just a question. When does telling the truth and setting the record straight equate to "taking shots at someone" or "bad mouthing"? If this was not the truth but just heresay, I would wholeheartedly agree with you. The posts by LL were the truth as I have seen the situations with these parties unfold over the years. Good, bad or otherwise, this is part of the history that has gone on with the supercars ever since the values skyrocketed on these rare beasts. This part of the history should be told along with the earlier history of these cars as well.

It's the internet! I don't know who is telling the truth and who is BSing and the bottom line is this is not the place to make the world right with respect to he said she said!

I have read Valarie Harrells input and have gotten more info than all the other post on this whole matter, and wish to thank her for her time to share with us. Because of this I have a different view than before.

I mean no disrespect to the familys, but their will never be a true Yenko, Harrell, Gibb, Thomas, or Nickey super car again. These guys invented the supercar and what makes these cars so speical is the history and who these guys were, drag racers. The bottom line is these new cars are just license named. Theres no input from the people who made these cars famous.

You can argue over who has rights to what, but until we hear from the familys, and their thoughts, this bickering is useless.

LL, Thats what I heard. My friend says he has old 8mm film of one at the Keystone Raceway in Pa. I wish I could have seen it personally back in the day when these cars were the owners daily drivers or racers and were thrashed upon. That would have been great
